

Methods Adopted By Tax Fraud Lawyers

We all have a responsibility to pay the federal government taxes each year but there are individuals and companies that do not believe this refers to them. This is of course against the law and a person or company found attempting this act is committing a crime. Each person and business has a duty to pay taxes to their government so it is able to function properly and fulfil its duty to its citizens. These types of offences are termed as white-collar crimes in legal circles, as ordinary citizens with no previous criminal record usually commit these crimes.

There are types of tax fraud and degrees of seriousness with tax evasion the most important but it can also refer to the small business that is just late in filing their tax report for the financial year. Anyone accused of this crime will probably hire a tax fraud lawyer to represent their interests.

Unlike other kinds of tax lawyers, tax fraud lawyers do not advise on tax planning or filing of income tax returns. If you require their services then either the worst is about to happen and you suspect the IRS are investigating you or they have concluded their work and have charged you with tax fraud offences. Imprisonment is not always necessary though and a good tax fraud lawyer will try to negotiate a settlement between the authorities and his client so that their liability is lessened.

Despite the serious nature of tax fraud, it is not always the fault of the person being investigated as ignorance of the laws can be to blame. Some individuals and firms also fall foul of poor advice for their tax planning from the tax specialists they employ to represent them.

Often attorneys will provide proof that their client was the unwilling victim of tax fraud and although still guilty it is usual for the punishment in these circumstances to be more lenient or the charges dropped completely. The need to choose a tax consultant that has proper qualifications cannot be underestimated in circumstance like this if investigation by the IRS is to be avoided.

The most common method adopted by tax fraud lawyers to get relief for their clients is by convincing the tax authorities that prosecuting the defaulter will do more harm than good and would not fetch them the recoverable tax dues. When this line of reasoning is well presented, the authorities might settle for a compromise by accepting payments in instalments or waiving off a part of the tax dues instead of prosecuting them.
